

CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

Salma Ainy is an Associate Professor in the School of Social Science, Humanities and Language at Bangladesh Open University. She holds a PhD in Applied Linguistics from the University of Nottingham (UK), and has particular interests in the use of literature in developing learners' speaking skills. Salma has published articles in this area, as well as collections of poetry.

Laura Baecher is an Assistant Professor of TESOL at Hunter College, City University of New York. She holds an EdD in TESOL from Teachers College, Columbia University, and has been an ESL teacher and teacher educator for the past twenty years. Her research interests relate to the connection between teacher preparation and teacher practice, including teacher language awareness, the use of video in clinical supervision and collaborative teaching for English language learners.

Gregory Birch is an Associate Professor at Seisen Jogakuin College in Nagano, Japan. He holds an MSc Degree in TESOL from Aston University and an MA in Japanese Language and Society from Sheffield University. His current research focus is on in-service teacher training for Japanese teachers of English. He has also presented and written articles on Task-Based Learning and the Japan Exchange and Teaching Programme.

Wayne Trotman is an Assistant Professor in the School of Foreign Languages at Izmir Katip Çelebi University, Turkey. He completed his doctoral studies at the University of Warwick in 2010, and in his present role, he is responsible for teacher education within his setting.

Samaneh Zandian is currently a PhD candidate in ELT and Applied Linguistics at the University of Warwick. She completed her Masters in ELT at the Centre for Applied Linguistics at the University of Warwick and in Translation Studies from Iran. She has a number of years of experience in teaching to a variety of age groups, and has particular interests in the processes of adaptation in relation to children sojourners.